IV. BOOK REVIEWS

Delivering Knock Your Socks Off Customer Service

Anderson and Zemke give the truth, straight and simple, about truly great customer service and the components of relationship building involved in any interaction. Outlining behaviors and problem solving tactics, their strategies ensure delivery of the highest standard of service every time.

Part I: The Fundamental Principles of KYSO (knock your socks off) Service

1. The one unbreakable rule:

You ARE the company- use “I” instead of “we”, don’t mention policy.

2. Know what KYSO Service is:

3. Reliable-keeping the service promise

- a. Organizational commitments: Through ads, communication materials, product warranties, etc. the company has promised certain things in the eyes of the customer.
- b. The customers’ expectations take the form of promises in their minds common expectations-from past experiences, competitor interactions and expectations; they bring these preset perspectives to the table.
- c. Personal promises-promises you or another employee has made you must manage these promises- once you know what they expect, you must formulate the promises you make based on what you can and cannot do for the customer.
- d. When promises are broken- first apologizing, don’t place blame.
- e. Timing is everything - find out what the customer now needs and do what you can to provide it in feasible, reliable terms and facts.
 - Find out the customer’s time frame-how soon is soon? What do they expect from you?
 - When setting a deadline, be realistic and be certain you can meet it.
 - Customers will be more dissatisfied with uncertainty than having to wait- give them the whole truth.

4. Responsiveness - it reassures customers when you follow through on your promise delivery schedules for example are especially important.

5. Reassuring- being friendly and well-mannered goes a long way, but proving your competency and reassuring the delivery of results is what matters. Trust is built on your knowledge, comprised of:

- a. Product knowledge-features, benefits, advantages etc.
- b. Company knowledge- know how the organization works so you can guide them to who can help them
- c. Listening skills- expect you to listen, understand and respond to any inquiry. Ask pertinent questions to uncover more information of the issue to get to the heart of the problem to fix it.

- d. Problem solving skills-customers expect you'll recognize their needs and quickly align them with services your organization provides. They expect you to be able to fix whatever goes wrong fast.
- e. Not just first impressions, but the entire interaction conveys your competency. Your mannerisms, dress, couth, etc. all can either help reassure a customer or hinder obtaining their trust.

6. Empathetic-Everyone has different emotional states and responds to different approaches-customize your strategy to their personality to generate better results.

- Empathy vs. sympathy--sympathy means identifying with and even taking on another's emotion, whereas empathy involves acknowledging and affirming another's emotional state.
- Be emotionally aware and sensitive, but remain emotionally uninvolved.

Essential to stay calm and professional, while still showing you care.

7. Tangibles- it's tough to define and describe an experience or feeling. While it's hard to put service into tangibles, it must be- all about quality not quantity.

8. Customers are everywhere- inside and out

- External-those that buy your products and services
- Internal-employees-their work and success is dependent on your work-identify them!
- Treating internal well conveys a positive perception to the externals.

9. Ten Deadly Sins of Customer Service:

1. Saying I don't know-customers expect you to know the answer or at least who else does that you can put them in touch with. Say I'll find out instead.
2. I don't care-reassure them, show you care!
3. I can't be bothered-the customer is your priority above all else- show them they are.
4. 'I don't like you'-customers can be sensitive to subtleties, do your best to convey friendliness and hide any personal grievances.
5. 'I know it all'-Don't get at solving the issue until the customer has fully communicated their problem---listen first, then act.
6. 'You don't know anything'- don't be condescending, help them understand it versus belittling them. There are no dumb questions.
7. 'We don't want your kind'-don't judge anyone and be sure not to appear that you are regardless of race, dress, etc. treat everyone equal, you never know who could turn out to be the best customer.
8. 'Don't come back'-don't act inconvenienced, annoyed etc. convey you want to see them again in the future.
9. 'I'm right and you're wrong'-don't argue with them, it's a personal pride issue; instead try to give them the benefit of the doubt.
10. Hurry up and wait-don't waste their time, ever!

Make the customers feel:

Heard, understood, liked, respected, feel helped, appreciated and respected.

10. Customer Service is always-the Customer

1. The customer is NOT always right
2. Without admitting the problem and misunderstanding, you cannot solve it.
3. How to make the customer right?
 - a. Assume innocence-they may be explaining it wrong or are simply misunderstand— help them obtain the correct information without making them feel dumb.
 - b. Look for teaching opportunities: what information could they have used before the issue arose?
 - c. Make sure they get it all and are in the state to be receptive-angry people often don't want to be told or taught anything.
 - d. Believe them-try to see if anything they are saying is in fact true. It's better to assume than to write them off as wrong.
 - e. Verify info. In front of them-double check the rules, etc.

Part II

11. Honesty is the only policy because:

- It always catches up to you
- Customers respect honesty
- You feel good about yourself which translates in your performance

12. Broken Rule

- Purpose of rules is to make things run more smoothly, effectively and organized, yet not all achieve this goal
- Rules vs. assumptions
- Don't assume there's a rule-find out for sure!
- There are types of rules: Red and Blue
 - Red: Serious consequences; legal, safety, rule cannot be bent
 - Blue: More policy centered and often need adjusting based on the scenario – use your experience and judgement to decide proper changes – know your own limits and when you need to check with a manager
- Learn why a rule is there in the first place this will allow you to determine its color/type, know its nature and the consequences

13. Do the right Thing regardless!

- Knowledge-know company rules, why they're there, etc. knowing customer's needs and expectations is also critical, along with the technical aspect to the job and the personal skills necessary to deal with problems.
- Action-oriented- take initiative, own the situation.
- Making judgments based on customer needs/use of the product. The 'policy' is to provide and often not in 'told' ways.
- Does the real situation
 1. Break a red rule
 2. If it's a blue rule – what is the result – why is it and what are the consequences

3. Who should make the final decision – are you in the position to do so or should you check with your manager?

14. Listening as a skill – use it!

- When you listen well you:
 - Determine the customer's wants and needs
 - Prevent misunderstandings
 - Get clues on how to improve service, increase sales
 - Build long-term customer relationships
- Listening can be learned –
 - Write stuff down-begin formulating ideas, but don't lose focus
 - Use it to reflect back-confirm what you heard
 - Ask if you're unclear on any of it
 - Reiterate critical information- spellings, contact info, etc.
- Barriers to effective listening
 - Noise-can you hear them well?
 - Interruptions-don't get distracted- says you don't care enough
 - Daydreaming
 - Technical issues-can't hear well, know how to operate the tech. systems
 - Stereotypes-sets up false judgments that are difficult to overcome later
 - Trigger words and phrases-don't let them get you
 - Personality-know different types and tailor your approach accordingly
 - Attitude-be positive, objective- don't get defensive, it limits you to hearing only what you want/expect to

15. Ask intelligent questions!

3 Types of Questions

1. Background- intros-tells you who they are, profile, etc.
 - i. Helps you evaluate if you are the right person to take call
 - ii. If protest anything, preview it and tell them you need to ask certain about certain information for their benefit.
2. Probing-delve deeper into the issue
 - i. Closed and open ended questions
 - ii. Ask them to tell you more
3. Confirmation questions
 - i. Checks & balances system-ensures you are correct and have everything you need-don't patronize when clearing up any questions they have-figure out why they don't fully understand and work with them.
 - ii. When questions go wrong.
 1. Timing- is it out of context?
 2. Ask something they think u should know already
 3. Too many questions
 4. Too personal- ensure confidence and preface it will be for their benefit

16. Winning words and soothing phrases- review list of phrases- avoid conveying 'I think you're stupid'

17. Face to Face Non-Verbal communication

9 basic dimensions

1. Proximity
2. Eye-contact
3. Silence-don't be awkward, but prove you're listening
4. Gestures-body language
5. Posture
6. Facial expression
7. Physical contact
8. Smell-easy on the cologne
9. Overall appearance

Read their non-verbal clues-what is their perception of you? Be perceptive yourself.

18. Tips for the Phone

19. Putting Pen to Paper or Fingers to Keyboard

Your message – you write to:

- Confirm understanding-follow letter is a form of confirming info via written communication.
- Create documentation- paper trails help keep evidence of progress or to back-up a verbal conversation
- Solidify relationships – helps make tangible and memorable fleeting in-person interactions- thank you notes, etc.

Email Tips

- Don't YELL- be cognizant of how your text sounds
- The outcome: your correspondence must clearly communicate the action, if any, they need to take—what do you expect to come from that writing? Make sure your words get that across

20. Exceptional Service is in the details – Attention to detail – everything counts!

The moment of truth-anytime anyone comes in to contact with your organization employees, product, ads, etc.

Managing the moment of truth:

1. Never stop learning-as experienced as you may be in your role, there's always more to learn and new situations to handle and new customers to deal with.
2. Ask your customers-the only real way to identify customers' moments is to get them to describe them to you
3. Ask your company- ask for survey stats and other studies your co. does to help you identify other moments.

It's the little annoyances that drive customers away more than the big issues.

21. . Good selling is good service-good service is good selling

Sales and service both have goal of satisfying the customer, but selling is not good service if:

- There are no alternatives provided
- When there is no slack-, no chance to redeem and they're mad and unwavering
- When there is no point- don't add something on that has no relevance
- When selling is good service
- When the product or service the customer acquired from your company is right but there are missing pieces or another process is needed
- When the product or service is out of date-suggest upgrade, give free trial but offer new product for purchase
- When the model or system the customer is using is wrong and you know which is right and help orient them toward the better option.
- When an add-on feature will forestall other problems, suggesting an extended warranty when problems have already occurred and are probably bound to reoccur.

- When changing the customer to a different product or service will be value added or TLC- making appropriate tweaks and changes to better service customers.

22. . Never underestimate the value of a sincere thank you Nine times when you should say thanks

1. When they do business with you-every time

4. When they try a new product or service-trying something new can be uncomfortable-be sure to tell them you recognize this and appreciate it
5. When they recommend a friend to you
6. When they are patient- and not so patient
7. When they help you to serve them better- when customers do their research and help the process
8. When they complain to you –it’s feedback-now you have the chance to make them loyal customers
9. When they make you smile

Three ways to say thank you- and do so immediately!

1. Verbally-say it after every encounter-say it with feeling-warm, pleasant, personal
2. In writing-send a follow up note
3. With a gift-make sure the value of the gift isn’t out of balance with the nature of the business involved.

Often forgotten to send a “thank you” to:

SAMPLE QUESTION ANSWERS:

Please see the following answers to the sample questions provided. A brief explanation was given for each answer and why the other options were incorrect. If you didn't do as well as you thought you would have, please consider re-reading the books or supplementary readings as the sample questions were drawn directly from them.

1. D- Customer service is how companies gain the edge over that fierce competition; it isn't a hindrance but a necessary reality that exceptional customer service is critical.
2. C – Feelings: Emotion is what comprises an experience and differentiates it from the classic components of a customer's purchase.
3. B – Determining the customers' specific needs is a critical in delivering the best of service. Instead of giving them your timeline, work as best you can (without under promising) around their schedule. The more specific the time, the better... widows of time are frustrating, even if you must make it a little longer, it's best to be as exact as possible.
4. C – Satisfaction is just that...it does not denote loyalty, the ultimate result of exceptional customer service. Just because a customer is satisfied, doesn't guarantee they'll continue to be a customer.
5. D –While importance of the other factors certainly exists, it's the extras that add to the experience for a customer, such as the ability to return a good whenever. The feeling of security and concern the shopper has because of that term will carry them toward the loyalty level.
6. A – The emotional aspect is what reigns in repeat purchasers; all the other elements can be sought elsewhere, however, a feel-good interaction will steer a customer back above all else.
7. A – It costs at least 5 times as much to win new customers that to maintain current customers, and in certain industries the ratio can be as high as 21.
